Poem by Gavin Evans

I see a white swan ferrying flowers
Bowling, thinking, swimming with color
The flowers show life and love blossoming from the bird
The swan's love shown with its embrace
As it sat upon the petal throne

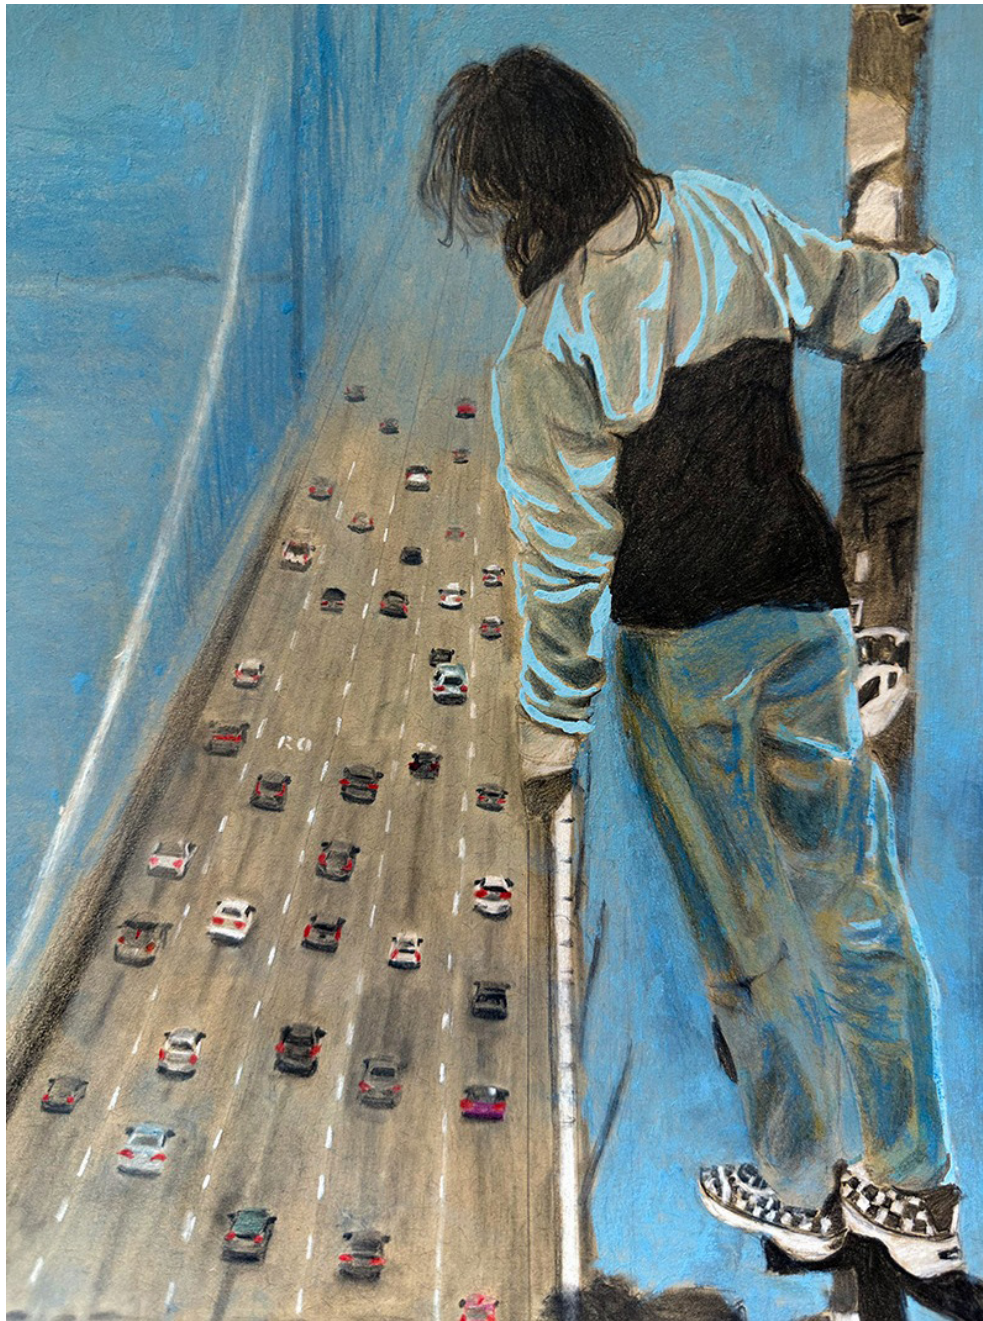

I see a beautiful collection of eccentric buttons
All the buttons have their own identity
With all different shapes, sizes, and characteristics
Can be used for many thing you can imagine
At times as a playful action

I see a beautiful pot of flowers
With a hand holding them tightly,
The hostile grasp upon the delicate florals
The flowers are a great bundle of joy
The passion of motherhood, nurturing them big and strong

I see distance. I don't see the end of the bridge
My heart screams because I'm far from home
I glimpse from above, as the cars carrying life stories pass through the bridge
Fast they fly despite the weight they carry
So maybe the wind could carry me

A white t-shirt is displayed against a light-colored wall, held up by two black binder clips at the top. The t-shirt is covered in a collage of black and white photographs and decorative lace trim. The photos depict various people, including children and adults, in different settings. Handwritten text is visible on some photos, such as "I love you", "I'm a daddy's girl", and "I'm a mommy's girl". The lace trim is used to frame some of the photos and is also placed horizontally across the collage. The overall theme appears to be a collection of memories or a tribute to family and friends.

I see a bottle cap tab
I see rows of silver caps fitting into place
I see recycling and reusing happening
Showing the growth of creativity and health

There is a humble chest
It is blind to the world for it has no eyes to rest
So, it searched for something to replace
Something, anything to use for a face
Realizing atop it has its clay knob
“Finally the right piece for the job”
Slowly with its new face it began to see and on it only an expression of pure glee.
